

Conciliation or not?

Read through each of the examples, and discuss with your partner whether they are suitable for being resolved through conciliation or not. Once you have decided, cut them up and stick them into the 'suitable for conciliation' column or the 'not suitable for conciliation' column.

A young female sports player is given a different penalty than the one given to men who play the same sport.	Two co-workers repeatedly argue over who owns a stapler.
A person is excluded from becoming a camp leader because they have a medical condition that causes them to limp.	A person engages in drink driving then subsequently hits someone's fence and car.
An online store cancels an order for baby formula from a person with a Chinese last name.	A person is refused a job interview because they do not have the necessary qualifications.
A person is encouraged not to apply for the police force by the admitting officer because they have a mental illness that requires medication.	A woman is overlooked for a promotion because the men at the workplace will not respect a female boss.
